The Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) has signed an agreement with the All India Institute of Medical Science (AIIMS) in Bhubaneswar for collaborative research and academic interactions among the faculty and scientists of the institutions. The memorandum of understanding was signed between the institutions on Monday in the presence of the Union Human Resource Development Minister. The minister also conducted an interaction with the officials of the central institutions on the occasion.

The union minister on the occasion also stressed on the void in the form of interdisciplinary research work where the areas of domains of the Institutions differ, particularly between technological Institutions and Medical Institutions which needs to be filled up. He also added that he is looking forward to the fruitful outcomes from the collaborations from both the institutions.

As per media reports, the minister on Monday stated that all the institutions are required to complement each other's works as a team and collaborate for meaningful outcomes in the interest of the society. The minister further added that an agreement between the IIT and AIIMS is a good start to these meaningful and fruitful collaborations between institutions.
